Here are some general guidelines for COVID-19 risk assessment policies in 2020:

1. Identify Potential Risks: Assess the potential risks associated with COVID-19 transmission within your workplace. Consider factors such as close contact between employees, shared equipment or surfaces, and the ability to maintain physical distancing.
2. Implement Preventive Measures: Implement preventive measures to reduce the risk of COVID-19 transmission. This may include promoting good hand hygiene practices, providing hand sanitizing stations, enforcing mask-wearing policies, and implementing physical distancing measures such as rearranging workspaces or staggering shifts.
3. Develop Cleaning and Sanitization Protocols: Develop and implement rigorous cleaning and sanitization protocols for frequently touched surfaces, shared equipment, and common areas. Use EPA-approved disinfectants and ensure that cleaning procedures are followed consistently.
4. Provide Training and Education: Provide employees with training and education on COVID-19 prevention measures, including proper handwashing techniques, the importance of wearing masks, and how to recognize symptoms of COVID-19. Ensure that employees understand the steps they need to take if they experience symptoms or come into contact with someone who has tested positive for COVID-19.
5. Encourage Remote Work: Encourage remote work for employees who can perform their job duties remotely. This can help reduce the number of employees in the workplace and minimize the risk of COVID-19 transmission.
6. Monitor and Update Policies: Regularly monitor the evolving situation surrounding COVID-19 and update your risk assessment policies accordingly. Stay informed about guidance and recommendations from public health authorities and adjust your policies as needed to ensure the safety of your employees.

These guidelines can serve as a starting point for developing COVID-19 risk assessment policies in 2020. It's important to tailor your policies to the specific needs and circumstances of your workplace and to prioritize the health and safety of your employees.
